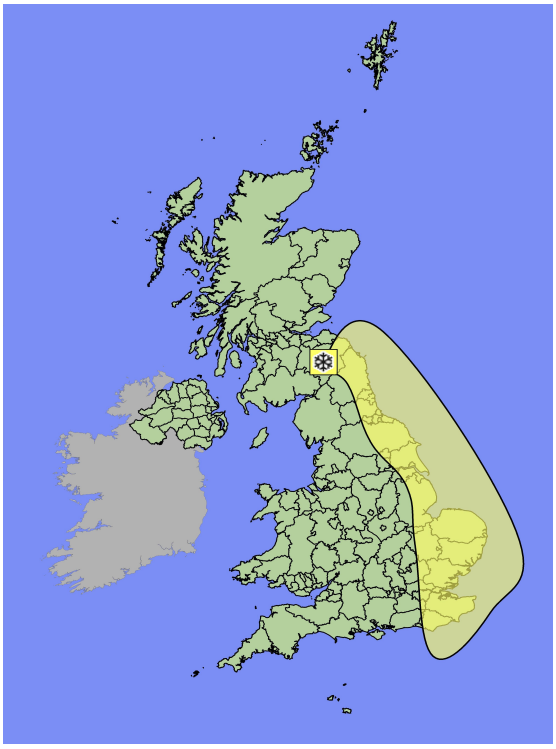
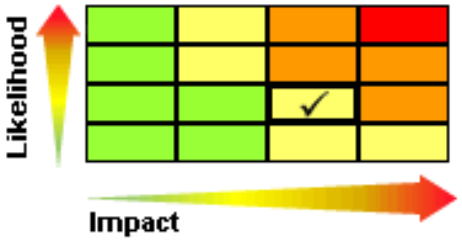
National Severe Weather Warning Service





Chief Forecasters Assessment
High pressure over Scandinavia and low pressure over France will bring cold northeasterly winds across the UK. As these winds pick up moisture over the North Sea, snow showers will form and will spread inland from these North Sea coasts.

The Met Office have issued a Yellow Alert of Snow

Valid from 00:05 on Wed, 16th Jan 2013 until 23:55 on Wed, 16th Jan 2013

Snow showers will affect eastern areas of both Scotland and England brought in by brisk northeasterly winds. These may add a few more centimetres of snow to any existing accumulations. For Kent, the main risk period is during the early hours of Tuesday morning. Given the very cold temperatures overnight any thawing of the snow by day will lead to icy stretches overnight.

The public should be aware of the continuing risk of disruption to travel.
